Old Memory: Ongoing Asymmetric Risks

We continue to prefer MLC NAND and NOR Flash over DDR4. Within legacy DRAM, we think spec migration and new opportunities differentiate stocks.

Key Takeaways

- MLC NAND/NOR pricing power should accelerate from 2Q26 led by Macronix.
- The DDR4 pricing hike is likely to be up 60% in 2Q, then decelerate into 2H.
- Intel EMIB could drive notable upside on silicon capacitors, mainly from AP Memory.
- Spec migration should continue to be the highlight from PSMC in 2027.
- We are OW Macronix, AP Memory (raised PT), PSMC and GigaDevice (raised PT). We are EW Nanya and Winbond.

Keeping our selective view; need to consider outlook beyond 2026: Old memory stocks typically show higher volatility when the cycle starts to roll forward (see memory downgrade note). We stick to our view that legacy NAND (especially MLC NAND) is better than DDR4. In this note, we also highlight new opportunities for legacy DRAM vendors to tap in the advance packaging area, growing along with rising non GPU server demand (see Shawn Kim's agentic AI report).

DDR4 - definitely still in tightness , but momentum decelerating: We believe DDR4 8Gb pricing will likely be above USD20 soon (and 4Gb above USD10). Some customers still see strong momentum given pull-ins (e.g., PC). This suggests DDR4 vendors could see high profitability in the near term. That said, we see limited share price upside amid pricing hike deceleration, KV cache compression, server system optimization and LTA discussions. CXMT is also adding some DDR4 support (see GigaDevice note).

Legacy flash - accelerating the pricing hike: We continue to see extreme tightness for MLC NAND, especially with reports of Kioxia phasing out of the market after Samsung (TrendForce News, 31 Mar 2026). We believe MXIC is trying to reallocate capacity to support MLC NAND, resulting in supply reduction on NOR. Thus, we believe both MLC NAND and NOR pricing could be up 100% at most in 2Q, and be maintained at high double digits into 2H.

New opportunities from EMIB-T: We believe AP Memory will be the major EMIB-T proxy in Taiwan, as it is the provider of silicon capacitors. Amid high power consumption from ASIC (e.g., TPU), we think its content per chip could be near USD100. This could be significant considering potential future customers (see our EMIB report). Incremental revenue could be 50%+ vs. the 2026e level. We think the most important factor to focus on is prepayment from some end-customers.

Intel EMIB Opportunity for AP Memory

Intel's (covered by Morgan Stanley Research Analyst Joe Moore) Embedded Multi-die Interconnect Bridge (EMIB) takes a more modular and cost-efficient approach: Instead of a full interposer, it uses small embedded silicon bridges only where high-bandwidth connections are needed, while relying on the organic substrate for the rest. Theoretically, this improves yield and reduces cost, while allowing flexible chiplet-based designs across different process nodes.

The downside is that EMIB does not provide a uniform high-density interconnect across the entire package, which can limit total bandwidth and make system-level routing more complex. As a result, it is generally less optimal for extreme bandwidth use cases compared to CoWoS, but it can support larger reticle-size design.

Also, besides EMIB technology itself, our latest industry checks suggest that those chip designers are concerned about the yield or execution from Intel since it lacks of the experience of mass produce EMIB-T products as well as serving external clients. Therefore, compared to TSMC, the operational risk and ultimate yield would also be taken into consideration from those customers to allocate how much chip production to Intel EMIB-T.

Exhibit 13: Intel's EMIB can support larger chips with more reticles (>12) if its supply chain can execute well

Exhibit 14: Intel's EMIB-T (new architecture) embeds silicon bridges featuring vertical copper connections (TSVs) into organic substrates, enabling superior power delivery, reduced noise, and high-speed HBM4 memory integration

According to Intel, to further stabilize power delivery, Intel Foundry integrates embedded deep trench capacitors (eDTC) for ultra-high capacitance density close to the load, thereby flattening PDN impedance across the base die. Embedded MIM (eMIM-T) technology delivers superior decoupling at the base die, leveraging the same advanced architecture as Omni MIM even on mature nodes. For precise, high-speed point-of-load regulation, CoaxMIL technology embeds magnetic inductors into the substrate, enabling integrated voltage regulators (IVRs) with rapid response and minimal loss. Together, these technologies form a scalable power delivery fabric that keeps pace with rising compute density. We believe these eDTC are IPD products that AP Memory provides.

Exhibit 15: An example of Intel Foundry's power delivery solution shown at Intel Direct Connect 2025, showcasing forward-looking plans for increased eMIM-T capacity; we think this is adopting AP Memory's IPD, which is the eDTC here

Source: Intel

For Intel EMIB's customer front, our checks suggest that both Google and AWS have reached out to Intel's EMIB-T for mechanical testing vehicles (MTV); we believe the production could be related to MediaTek's next-generation 2nm version TPU as well as Alchip's next generation 2nm Trainium4, while the trial run is likely to be in 2027 and mass production to be in 2028 if everything goes smoothly. Since Alchip already has a strong relationship with Intel on Gaudi production, we believe Alchip has been more familiar collaborating with Intel and its workflow.

We still do not yet know how those next-generation chips will be allocated between Intel's EMIB-T vs. TSMC's CoWoS/CoPoS. However, both Google and AWS are the two leaders among major CSPs in terms of AI ASIC design. We therefore see these two companies needing larger chip size design in their ASIC roadmap; the allocation will depend greatly on 1) Intel's EMIB-T production yield, 2) TSMC's CoWoS reticle support, and potentially 3) TSMC's CoPoS schedule.

Besides Google and AWS, our checks also suggest that Meta is approaching Intel for potential EMIB-T production for its future AI ASIC as well. However, the progress may be at an even earlier stage compared to Google and AWS, in our view, because its ASIC is less mature than other CSPs.

AP Memory: Estimate Revision Summary

We raise our 2026/2027/2028 EPS estimates by 2%/13%/13%, respectively: We factor in 1Q26 preliminary sales, which we see leading to higher 2026 earnings. We raise increase our 2026-27 revenue forecasts due to the stronger IPD outlook and a better pricing environment for the IoT business from memory price hike. In comparison, consensus 2026 and 2027 EPS estimates are NT$14.52 and NT$22.98, respectively. Our stronger EPS forecasts reflect our more constructive view on the IPD shipment outlook, we believe.

AP Memory: Valuation Methodology

We raise our price target to NT$777 from NT$607 to factor in preliminary sales for 1Q26 and our estimate changes for 2026-28. We also lift our intermediate growth rate from 11% to 12.8% as we factor in the Intel EMIB opportunity for AI in the long run.

Aside from intermediate growth, our other residual income model assumptions are unchanged, including: 1) cost of equity unchanged at 9.2% (2.0% risk-free rate, 6% risk premium, 1.2 beta); 2) payout ratio of 67%; and 3) terminal growth rate of 3% to be more in line with the long-term macro growth rate. Our new PT implies 2026e P/E of 48x and 2027e P/E of 30x – more than 1 s.d. above the historical average since 2020. Our bull and bear case values rise to NT$1,145 (from NT$895) and NT$376 (from NT$294), respectively.

GigaDevice: Estimate Revisions and Quarterly Financials

We increase our 2025 EPS estimate by 2%, essentially maintain 2026, and lift 2027 by 13%: We reflect preliminary 4Q25 revenue, leading to a slight increase on the 2025 bottom line. We lift our 2027 revenue forecast as we believe GigaDevice will ramp up 16G LPDDR4 and 32G DDR4 at CXMT's Gen 4 platform in 2027, based on its latest announcement. GM should rise slightly in 2027 amid a better product mix.

GigaDevice: Valuation methodology

We increase our price target from Rmb301 to Rmb348: This reflect our higher earnings estimates and an increase in our intermediate growth rate assumption from 16.0% to 16.4%, mainly on the new opportunity in LPDDR4 in 2027. We continue to derive our price target from a residual income model, which we believe best captures the stock's long-term value. Our key assumptions include: cost of equity of 8.9% (beta 1.1, risk-free rate 2%, and risk premium 6%), payout ratio of 40% and a terminal growth rate of 3.0%. We reduce our medium-term and terminal growth rates estimates to reflect our more cautious view on DDR4. Our new price target implies 2026e P/E of 43x, roughly in line with the historical average of 40x since 2016. We increase our bull case value from Rmb523 to Rmb604 and our bear case value from Rmb219 to Rmb254.

PRICE TARGET Rmb348.00

Our price target of Rmb301 is our base case value, derived from our residual income model. Key assumptions: cost of equity of 8.9% (beta 1.1, risk-free rate 2% and risk premium 6%), a payout ratio of 40%, medium-term growth rate of 16.4%, and a terminal growth rate of 3.0%.

OVERWEIGHT THESIS

- We expect GigaDevice to continue to gain share in China's MCU market. Auto MCUs offer bigger opportunities as local self-sufficiency is low.
- We see further NOR Flash pricing upside, and expect GigaDevice NOR quality to catch up in the auto segment.
- Specialty DRAM pricing started to rebound in late 1Q25, and there are opportunities such as wafer-on-wafer specialty memory.
- We believe GigaDevice will ramp up 16G LPDDR4 and 32G DDR4 at CXMT's Gen 4 platform in 2027.
- Our new price target implies 2026e P/E of 43x, roughly in line with the historical average of 40x since 2016.

Morgan Stanley uses a relative rating system using terms such as Overweight, Equal-weight, Not-Rated or Underweight (see definitions below). Morgan Stanley does not assign ratings of Buy, Hold or Sell to the stocks we cover. Overweight, Equal-weight, Not-Rated and Underweight are not the equivalent of buy, hold and sell. Investors should carefully read the definitions of all ratings used in Morgan Stanley Research. In addition, since Morgan Stanley Research contains more complete information concerning the analyst's views, investors should carefully read Morgan Stanley Research, in its entirety, and not infer the contents from the rating alone. In any case, ratings (or research) should not be used or relied upon as investment advice.
